for several years past, saw one of the advertisements and reported his whereabouts.

Karl came to America in 1876, and after acting as hostler in the East and Texas came through Southern California to Sacramento, and has been here five years. He began service here as a hostler at Miller's stables, and also drove a hack for James Giliman, but for several years has been driving for James fromey. When he came here he told his history to Toomey and others; how he was engaged in a broil one night with other soldiers; how officers swooped down upon them, and in proof of this exhibited a saber wound on his temple. He also related the facts concerning his escape substantially as given in the statement of his brother in New York. But hackmen generally pride themselves on bring too smart to be "stuffed" with faction, and they did not believe him. He has all the while been in ignorance of the fortune that has for three years been awaiting division between him and his only brother. He could scarcely speak the English language when he came to Sacramento, but he had a good education and has improved. He has been very energetic and honest, and the rival runners about the depot are loud in their praises of his talents and attention to business. When he was 'green' they called him "Datchy." He is now about thirty years old. As soon as the overjoyed backman could control himself after receiving the good news he consulted with his friends, and letters were written to his uncles in New York. The German consul of San Francisco was also sent for and came here yesterday. He expressed the opin ion that had the other brother been very anxions to find Karl, the New York and San Francisco German papers would have been used as advertising mediums. Several years ago the fugitive concluded to become an American citizen in fact. He obtained the first papers necessary to make him so, and yesterday he applied to the superior court and was admitted to citizenspip upon the testimony of H. Groth and F. H. Hopper. This last move was made in order move was made in order that he may claim to be an American citizen, if, upon his return to Germany, the military government attempts to force him back into pris n or into the army from which he fled. He will leave here at an early date, but proposes to be cautious. His present intention is first to go into the kingdom of Beigium, to a point only about twenty miles from the country whose stern military law he fears, and from there conduct future operations.

Executions in England.

Executions in England.

A table compiled by the directors of convict prisons presents some curious facts regarding the history of sentences of death in England and Wales during the last fifty years. It appears that even as late as 1833, when the table commences, so common was it to pass death sentences not of the gravest kind that of 631 such sentences in that year, only nine were for actual murder. Death sentences must, however, clearly have lost their peculiar terrors, for out of these 961 condemnations, with all their attendant solemnities of the black cap and the judge's exhortations, the extreme penality was really carried out only in 33 cases. The last year in which sentence of death was passed for a crime short of murder was in 1874, when there was one instance only. With this exception there has been no such case since 1862. The e-ornous disproportion between sentences and executions has long since disappeared; but the chances of a capital sentence being carried out appear to be still in favor of the condemned. Thus in the four years 1879-82 there have been 107 condemnations, whereas the executions have been 51 only.
